Is the Ph.D Degree and its Experience
NOT Worth in Industries?

Dr. Akiko Yoshida

Biography :

Akiko Yoshida has worked in many types of organizations: Japanese startup company, US government project in a university, German national research institute, and Japanese big industries. She received her doctoral degree (Dr.-Ing.) in Computer Science for HDR imaging system and perception, from Max-Planck-Institut für Informatik. Since she left working in academia, she has been establishing her career at industrial companies. She started her industrial career as a researcher at SHARP R&D division, had some experience of the technical planning, and led several types of engineering teams in SHARP and Konica Minolta. Her latest product is SHRP's AQUOS in Japan, North America, APAC, and Mid East. Currently she is a senior manager of the engineering teams for new business in Konica Minolta.
